Fudan University scholarship for our program
International students enrolled in our program are qualified for the application for the scholarship funded by Shanghai Municipal Government on a competitive basis. Detailed information is available at www.fso.fudan.edu.cn/xuexi_sh.htm

Social events
Each academic year, our program organizes various study tours and social functions, which provide students with opportunities to expose Chinese society and culture.

Students’ Words

Jerome Veron
The folks at Fudan and more specifically at the School of Social Development and Public Policy will be happy to assist your integration into this new environment while organizing your curriculum as well as extracurricular activities. If there is one main thing you can expect to learn from engaging in Fudan’s EMA in Chinese Society, it is the complexity of contemporary China and the long, perilous and sometimes twisted path which has led the country to its modern-day prosperity while creating new issues that need urgent consideration. I am convinced that such detailed cultural and sociological knowledge, rather than the approximations and misconceptions held by so many, must serve as the firm foundation for our considerations about the People’s Republic of China and any interaction we wish to pursue with this remarkable country.

Barek Zari
The program focuses on many aspects of China’s society, such as Chinese demographic, culture, language and social policy. It also doesn’t restrict student from attending courses from other EMA programs such as Politics, Economy and Culture. It also allows students from different nationalities to interact and engage in constructive discussions and dialogues. Visiting professors from top universities around the world adds to the program quality, thus allowing students the chance to hear different perspectives on China from different scholars of different backgrounds. Perhaps, another great thing about studying in Fudan is the amount of assistance and support students receive from both the administration and the professors at any time, giving the students the sense that they are in their second home.

A top program in a top university
Fudan university, founded in 1905, is one of the prestigious universities in China. For years, Fudan has been a major destination of international students who are going to study in China. Our program is one of the well-established EMA programs at Fudan, attracting students from the United States, Canada, Norway, Germany, Brazil, Pakistan, Eritrea, Sweden and Mexico.

Strong academic network
The School of Social Development and Public Policy (SSDPP), the host of the program, has networked with renowned universities in the US, Japan, Korea, UK, Canada, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark. The SSDPP has the joint teaching programs with Bergen University, Lund University, Queen’s University, and the University of California at Los Angeles.

Internationalized Faculty
Our teaching staff has strong academic background and rich teaching experience. Most of them receive their degrees from overseas universities and are active in the international academic community.

The state-of-the-art and flexible Curriculum
Our curriculum, covering a wide range of the current hot issues and theoretical debates, provides a platform for international students to develop their better understanding of rapidly changing Chinese society and related public policies. We offer both degree and non-degree programs to accommodate students’ different interests and needs.
